

What secrets lie and dost thou keep beneath your waves,
To the depths of thy soul, where treasures lay?
The lapping of your foreign tongue
Conversing with the West, you play.
You argue and your fury tempts the trees to beg for mercy.
The swift movement disturbs your rest.

Cottage: Summer 2005

Joanne Steel Yordanou